  - A collective marketing campaign was announced today: The National Park Foundation (NPF) is delighted to share that today, August 25, they are launching All For Parks – a collective marketing campaign. All For Parks is intended to be a powerful rallying cry that brings together NPF, park and corporate partners, and the public in support of parks. The campaign, which will run for the next several years, will bring greater awareness to this community and inspire people to join us all in supporting national parks.
    - i. To mark the launch, NPF will fill our social media channels with All For Parks content on Facebook, Instagram, and LinkedIn. Park partners are an important part of this campaign and park partners participating in the Collective Campaign will have the added benefit of access to the All For Parks creative toolkit.
    - ii. All nonprofit partners to the National Park Service are invited to participate in the Collective Campaign and join the effort to expand the network of national park supporters. We hope you'll consider joining NPF, the National Park Friends Alliance, and the 100+ Campaign partners in this movement to elevate national parks as a philanthropic priority.
    - iii. To join the Campaign or learn more, please reach out to Charlotte Ford, cford@nationalparks.org.
